Journal Your Thoughts

1. Spend a day writing down your thoughts and examine them. Are your thoughts nurturing you and helping you move in a positive direction or are they harming your growth?

2. When you think of life without self-limiting beliefs, what does that look like to you? What would you go after if you knew you couldn't fail?

3. What are three positive things you've been told about yourself or your business? Write these compliments down and add new ones to the list. Eventually, you'll have a long list of encouraging things that other people have said about you.

Journal Your Thoughts

1. Who could you partner with that might like to work on overcoming their own self-limiting beliefs?

2. What self-limiting belief have you chosen to work on first? What caused this self-limiting belief to develop?

3. What affirmation would counter your self-limiting belief? Write it down on several sticky notes and hang them throughout your home. Add the sentence as an "entire day" appointment to your calendar, like as you would add a birthday so that it will show up on all of your electronic devices. Schedule it for a week to begin with.
